IV. Remarks by Board Members

Robert Gerrol stated that he had been reviewing much of what had been going on since this was started, and one of the things that made him rather sad is that the Complainant's presentation--while it had some important considerations for us--the unfortunate part about it was that there was too much in the way of suppositions. The Complainant had a lot of information that I looked at again, and then I reviewed all of that which I had read and heard, and it reminded me of Shakespeare's Hamlet. It dawned on me that what we were hearing was 'she said, he said' and then 'she said, she said'. This is unfortunate because much of this is unproven and unprovable, and I think that's very sad because there were some important considerations for us all. In my opinion, I don't know where we are; but while there might be an inkling of probable cause, the point is that we are past that, and I don't see any value/benefit of going forward any further on this because I don't think it would accomplish anything. The Respondents are no longer in the positions they were in before, so it seems to me that what we have is a moot situation. I'm not sure if anyone else has the same feelings. One of the things that I read was that it was said that I don't live here and I don't work in Town Hall. The fact that they don't work in Town Hall is not exactly true because in order to do the work that they do which is admittedly very important work, they do work in Town Hall. They might not have a desk, but they have a Conference Room where they debate the needs of their positions.
